What is an Assisted Living Residence?

- A residence that offers a long term care alternative to skilled care.
- Promotes independence, privacy, dignity, and choice with an emphasis on “Aging in Place.”
- Focused on resident directed service and care.
- Provides for a minimum package of services and care.
- Arranges or provides for transportation.
- Provides for an informed consent process to allow a resident to make decisions even if the decision is not the best choice for them.
- Only licensed ALR providers can publicly represent themselves as an Assisted Living Residence.
- Exceeds and expands on Resident rights for Personal Care Homes.
- Provides a private living unit with private bathroom.
- Residents can share living units if it is the resident's choice, but no more than two people can share a unit.
- Requires a private bath.
- New construction requires a private kitchenette.
- Requires individual heating and cooling units for the living unit.
- New construction requires 225 sq. feet for a living unit that enhances a “home like setting” for a single resident.
- Requires a telephone jack in each living unit, as well as, a phone for use by all residents.
- Requires an emergency response system in the bathroom and the living unit.
- Requires each living unit has a lockable door.
- Requires a licensed nurse on site or available 24/7.
- Requires that all direct care staff be certified in first aid before allowed to provide care.
- Requires that all direct care staff be certified in CPR before allowed to provide care.
- Requires a registered dietician on staff or under contract.
- Provides for a higher level of clinical needs, including those needing skilled care.
- Provides supplemental health services.
- Requires a residence must have an AED.
- Requires more training in dementia for all workers.

Please note that this list is based on required minimum standards of care and is not comprehensive. For more information on services & requirements for assisted living facilities, please check with the Pennsylvania Assisted Living Association.

What is a Personal Care Home?

- A home for those “who do not require the services in or of a long term care facility.”
- Offers a philosophy of keeping residents “as safe” as possible.
- Focused on “regulatory and facility directed” service and care.
- Provides for a “provider defined” package of services and care.
- No requirement to arrange or provide for transportation.
- Discharges to higher levels of care when necessary.
- Provides regulatory & physician required services.
- Basic Resident Rights required.
- Residents cannot opt out of services provided.
- Provides a “resident bedroom” that can be shared by up to four residents.
- Requires a “flushable toilet and shower for up to six residents.”
- Requires a screened window.
- Requires each bedroom to have 80 square feet of floor space.
- Requires “a phone available in the home”.
- No locks required.
- Requires that the combined living room and lounge area can accommodate all residents at one time.
- No nursing requirement at all with PCH regulations.
- Does not provide for those needing a higher level of care including skilled care, a resident must move if these services are needed.
- Requires that one staff member for every 50 residents be trained (not certified) in first aid.
- Requires that one staff member for every 50 residents be certified in CPR.
- A physician determines PCH suitability or requirement for a higher level of care.

Please note that this list is based on required minimum standards of care and is not comprehensive. For more information on services & requirements for personal care homes, please check with the Pennsylvania Assisted Living Association.
